The Customer must indemnify the Company, as far as the Company might become liable for such loss or damage.

6. Order confirmation

The electronic order confirmation is binding for the Customer.

In case the order confirmation differs from the Customer's order, and the Customer does not wish to accept the content, the Customer must notify the Company about this no later than 5 work days after the order confirmation's dating. 8. Responsibility & Force Majeure

Each party is responsible for own actions and omissions according to the law in force, with the limitations that follow from the Terms of Agreement.

The Company is responsible for product liability with regard to the delivered products, as far as such a responsibility follows from absolute law. The Customer must indemnify the Company, as far as the Company should become liable to product liability in addition to this.

Regardless of potential opposite conditions in the Terms of Agreement, the Company is not responsible to the Customer for indirect loss, including loss of production, sales, profit, time or goodwill, unless this has been caused intentionally or gross negligently.

Regardless of potential opposite conditions in the Terms of Agreement, the Company is not responsible to the Customer for missing fulfilment of obligations that can be related to force majeure. The freedom from responsibility endures as long as force majeure endures. Force majeure is considered as conditions beyond the Company's control and which the Company should not have predicted at the time of the signing of the agreement. Examples of force majeure are exceptional nature conditions, war, terror, fire, floods, vandalism and work conflicts.

The trade between the parties is subject to Danish law in every sense.

Any dispute that might occur in connection with the trade between the parties, must be attempted settled amicably. If no settlement is reached, the dispute must be subsequently settled by the Court in Herning.
